

Charlie Reeves took his boys on a camping trip to Cape Look-out not long ago. Camp was set up about a mile from the ocean.

While Mr. Reeves and his sons were walking across country to the beach, 10-year-old David asked, "When are they going to build a road down here, Daddy?"

"I don't know," Mr. Reeves answered.

"Well, I hope they don't ever build one," David commented, "because if they build roads women will come here and where there are women there's always soap, and I haven't seen a piece of soap since we left home."
